The world His coming waited long, The theme of prophecy and song:
Yearned up to God, through blood and fire.
Unsatisfied her one desire:
And all creation grouned afresh:
To see God manifest in flesh:
To see arth's tribes, scattered abroad,
Gathered in One, the sons of God.

When Time was ripe, of woman born, Men turned upon itim in their scorn; A Man of sorrows and of grief. In yain He sought on earth relief; Homeless by day, at night no bed, Nor pillow for His weary head; For Him no respite could there be, Till finished was His ministry.

He walked beneath the circling sun, Spake but the word, and it was done; Rebuked the waters in their might, Gave to the blind their longed-for sight; He spake, the deaf were quick to hear, The rifled tomb contessed Him near, So gracious He to guide and teach, The common people loved His speech.

The shiv'ring rocks were rent in twain, And earth herself felt throes of pain;
The sun for shame, in his high place,
Hid from the sight his very face;
The startled tombs gave up their dead,
When this Man bowed His thorn-crowned head, Who tasted death for you and me, Alone that day on Calvary.

"How I was Taken In." BY THE EDITOR.

Several times in my boyhood and early life I was very badly taken in. I thought I would tell some of the young people how it was, that they may keep their eyes open.

When I was a little fellow, I took a long walk and got very tired. An old gentleman said to me, "So you got tired, did you?"

"Yes," I answered.
"Well," said he, "the next time you go to take a walk I can tell you what to do; if you get very tired pick up a heavy log and carry it until you are so tired that you can scarcely stand up. Then drop the log, and, being relieved of that great weight, you will shoot along as fresh as a lark." So the next time I went to walk I got so tired that I could scarcely go along, and was foolish enough to pick up a big stone and struggle along with it about twenty yards, and then dropped it and expected to "shoot" forward, and I did for about three steps, when I was ten times as tired as I was before I took the stone up. I learned from that that some helps are worse than none.

Another time I saw a stuffed dog on a porch. He was the most perfect image of a living dog, and I thought for a few minutes that he was alive, and said to a gentleman who was alive, and said to a gentleman who was walking with me, "Is that dog dead or alive?" Said he, "He is dead; he is a stuffed dog; but every time he hears the gate open he barks."

I worked the gate four or five times backward and forward, but there was no sound. Said I, "It is a humbug. He doesn't bark." "Well," said the man, "he has not heard the gate open, has he?" I learned from that that when any thing is said to you it is not always safe to take the first meaning of it, but lura it over in the mind.

When I got to be a little older I went to a book auction and looked over the catalogue, and picked out four or five books which I thought I would like to have, and in a little while the auctioneer began and called off one of my books, and said, "Here is a great book -Mr. Emerson's Representative Men; how much for this? Have I a bid?'
And somebody said, "Fifty cents." said, "Fifty-five;" the auctioneer went went on, "Fifty-five, fifty-five, fiftyfive," as fast as he could talk, and got going so fast he could not say fifty, but dy-fiddy-five. Somebody else said "Sixty," and he went on. I said,
"Sixty-five," and they kept adding on and on, and finally I said, "Two dol-lars," and got it. In a similar way I bought all the books I had picked out. Then I went into a book-store and asked the price of those books and found that I had paid about seventy-five cents apiece more for these shop-worn books than I could have bought them new for in any store.

I learned from that that the time to keep your head clear is when you are making a bargain. The man who wants to sell may be glad to get you excited, and the man who wants to buy must keep cool.

When I had grown still older I had a sore throat, and instead of going to a good physician that lived near me I thought I would send to one whose advertisements I saw in all the papers. I wrote to him, telling him I was a young man earning my own way and I had a sore throat, and I would like him to send me something that would be good for it, and to make the terms as reasonable as he could, as I had not very much money. So he sent me two pills and a prescription for a gargle for my throat. One of these pills 1 took. my throat. The other I have yet.

When I went to have the gargle put up I noticed that the prescription contained two things; one was chloride of sodium and the other was capsicum. I happened to say to the druggist, "What kind of a thing is chloride of sodium?" "Why," said he, "it is common table salt." Then I said, "What kind of a thing is capsician?" Said he, "I is common red pryper." Then I showed him one of the pilis, and he said, "That is a blue pill." Now I had to pay $20 for that medi-cine—that is, I paid $20 for a pill that I could have bought for twenty cents and to find out that salt and pepper mixed with vinegar or water would make a good gargle for the throat. You see that I have given you this prescription for nothing.

What is the moral of this story? Never be deceived by great names. Chloride of sodium is salt, and capsicum is pepper; but some people would think, as I did, that such a prescription was much more valuable with the big name than with the common name. Whenever any one uses big words do not be deceived by the words; find out what the things are that the

I will give you one more, which will do for this time.

Once I was going to take a train to go to an important place. I knew that I had just about time enough to catch I had just about time enough to eaten it if I walked very fast. I overtook a man on the way and he said, "Where are you going?" I said "I am going to take the 10:40 train." "O," said he, "do not be in a hurry; I am going to take that train." So I waited behind and walked along and had a pleasant obet with him, but when I got there. chat with him; but when I got there the train had been gone about three minutes, and it cost me a large sum to reach the place by a special convey-what is the moral of that? When you know you are right, go ahead on your own account, and let the other man keep up to you.

That is one lesson, and there are a good many more; the most serious of which is, never put off giving your heart to God because somebody else says, "I am going to do it sometime; wait for me and we will both do it together."

As the first stiffness of new acquaintance diminished the polish of his language wore off somewhat, and such expressions as "By George," "Gorry," "Faith," put in an appearance. These he used first with the children, who didn't seem offended by them as they have the more it is used.

The flush subsided, but his case of manner did not return. He evidently left that his disguise had been penetrated, and that in her eyes he stood for what he was a venered gendeman, a gentleman on the outside, not on the inside.

There was a number of children on the train, and as evening approached they collected in a group about the young stranger, drawn together by the strong bonds of childish sympathy. By and by the little voices were heard, and many an ear unused to such strains listened eagerly to the words they sang sweetly together, "Jesus loves me."
